It cost him about fifteen dollars an acre for labor, seed, and fertilizer. His crop is sixty or eighty or even one hundred bushels, which means a net return of from fifteen to thirty-five dollars to the acre, or three to seven times what the other farmer made. The farmer counts more than the land. For many years the great United States Department of Agriculture has been teaching the farmers, and particularly the Southern farmers, to grow better and more profitable crops. It has accomplished much, and to no one man is more credit due than to the late Dr. S. A. Knapp, who thoroughly understood not only Southern farming but the Southern farmer; and knowing the one counts nearly as much as knowing the other. For farmers do not turn to new methods readily, and they are apt to hold the knowledge of strangers in small esteem. Have you never heard some old farmer say something like this? Yes, I reckon the Government is spending a lot of money to teach us old dogs new tricks. But what can those men back in Washington teach me about how to grow corn? I have farmed this place for thirty years; if I don't raise more corn it is the fault of the land, not my fault. These new theories may be all very well for those who have time for them, but the man who knows most...
