Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Care and Feeding of Infants It is commonly believed that there is a greater mortality among bottle-fed babies than among those raised upon breast milk. This may have been true in former years, but under the improved conditions of infant feeding, as now practised by the best methods, bottle-fed children have, in the struggle for existence, at least an equal chance with those nourished upon breast milk. Indeed, unless all the conditions surrounding natural nursing are of the very best, their chances are even greater. One of the most eminent specialists in children's diseases is the authority for the following: There can be no doubt, though the statement is a bold one and seemingly contrary to nature, that, taking the average, infants properly brought up by hand are better developed and enjoy more perfect health than those completely breast-fed. D., Clinical Professor of Diseases of Children in the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania; Physician to the Children's Hospital, Philadelphia; 1886, page 339.)
