Certainty is demanded in pleadings, also freedom from analysis, construction, argument and hypothesis. The foregoing well illustrates the difficulty of applying tests of an adjudication, even in states that respect the mandatory record. Sec. 74. A rule of evidence is chiefly involved We have mentioned the best evidence, and that what ought to be of record must be proved by record and by the right record. It is well to remember that in a general sense pleadings are but evidence; from caption to verification they are the best evidence of all that relates to the controversy. It may be truly said of them that what should appear from the pleadings must so appear, and also that what is shown by them is conclusive. Exp-ressio unius est exclusio alterius. Besides this, it is well to impress that the purpose and destiny...
