CHAPTER VII One Hundred Consecutive Cases Of Twilight Sleep At The Mary Thompson Hospital, June 1 To December 1, 1914 BEGAN using scopolamine in obstetrics about eight years ago, but gave it up after a short experience. This early experience demonstrated to my satisfaction that scopolamine-morphine shortened the first stage of labor. I gave at that time 1/100 grain of scopolamine and *4 grain of morphine as the initial dose and expected to repeat it in four hours unless the cervix was completely dilated. The injection was never given until the pains were strong and regular, and my experience was that at the end of two or three hours after the injection the cervix was completely dilated. I feared at this time to repeat the dose, so the labor was completed by using a little chloroform for the delivery of the head. This large dose of morphine was occasionally given so close to the beginning of the second stage that I feared that the infants would be asphyxiated on account of it. In no case could I have stated positively that it had caused asphyxia, but on theoretical grounds alone I gave up its use altogether in obstetrics. Then, too, my obstetrical work was largely made up of Cesarean sections, forcep deliveries, eclampsias and abnormalities, cases where the life of the child is always in jeopardy, and I feared that scopolamine-morphine used in such cases would be unjustly blamed for any accident that...
